

HOW A WEBSITE GETS BUILT

Seven steps, and you see every one.

Most people have been burned by a web project that went quiet for a month and came back wrong. This is exactly how ours run, so you know what happens next at every stage.

Start to finish.

01 Consultation

A conversation, not a pitch. What the business does, who you are trying to reach, what is not working now, and what a good outcome looks like in six months.

02 Strategy

We agree what the site is actually for — bookings, credibility, sales — and what belongs on it. This is where we cut the pages nobody will read.

03 Design

Layouts and visual direction, shown early and in the browser rather than as a flat picture, so you can see how it really behaves.

04 Development

The build, shipped in pieces you can open and click through as they land. No disappearing for six weeks.

05 Review

You go through it properly on your own phone and laptop. We fix, adjust and refine until it is right, and we expect revisions.

06 Launch

Domain, hosting, SSL, analytics, Google setup and the social preview cards. We handle the technical side so nothing breaks on day one.

07 Support

Ongoing fixes, tuning, content updates and new features as you learn what your customers respond to. The people who built it are the people who look after it.

Not much, honestly.

An hour at the start

One proper conversation about the business is worth more than twenty emails later. Everything else we can work around.

Your content, or a steer

Text, photos, logos and credentials if you have them. If you do not, we will draft and you correct — that is usually faster anyway.

Honest feedback at review

Tell us what is wrong plainly. Revisions are part of the job, not an inconvenience, and a polite nod at review costs everyone more later.

Someone who can decide

Projects stall when nobody can approve. One decision-maker keeps it moving.
